

Big Sioux Water Festival Presents:

Reader's

heater

The Great Kapok Tree

by
Lynne Cherry

14 parts:

Narrator	The Man	Monkey	Boa
Toucan	Frog	Jaguar	2 Butterflies
Anteater	Sloth	Boy	2 Porcupines

Narrator                    One man was walking into the rain forest. Moments before, the forest had been alive with the sounds of squawking birds and howling monkeys. Now all was quiet as the creatures watched the man and wondered why he had come. The man stopped and pointed to a great Kapok tree. Then he took the ax he carried and struck the trunk of the tree.

The Man                    Whack! Whack! Whack!

Narrator                    The sounds of the blows rang through the forest. The wood of the tree was very hard.

The Man                    Chop! Chop! Chop!

Narrator                    The man wiped off the sweat that ran down his face and neck.

The Man                    Whack! Chop! Whack! Chop!

Narrator                    Soon the man grew tired. He sat down to rest at the foot of the great Kapok tree. Before he knew it, the heat and hum of the forest had lulled him to sleep. A boa constrictor lived in the Kapok tree. He slithered down its trunk to where the man was sleeping. He looked at the gash the ax had made in the tree. Then the huge snake slid very close to the man and hissed in his ear.

Boa                            Senor, this tree is a tree of miracles. It is my home, where generations of my ancestors have lived. Do not chop it down.

Narrator                    Two butterflies flew near the sleeping man's ear.

Butterfly 1                 Senor, our home is in this Kapok tree, and we fly from tree to tree and flower to flower collecting pollen.

Butterfly 2                 In this way we pollinate the trees and flowers throughout the rain forest. You see, all living things depend on one another.

Narrator                    A troupe of monkeys scampered down from the canopy of the Kapok tree. They chattered to the sleeping man.

Monkey                     Senor, we have seen the ways of man. You chop down one tree, then come back for another and another. The roots of these great trees will wither and die, and there will be nothing left to hold the earth in place. When the heavy rains come, the soil will be washed away and the forest will become a desert.

Narrator                    A toucan flew down from the canopy.

Toucan                      Senor! You must not cut down this tree. We have flown over the rain forest and seen what happens once you begin to chop down the trees. Many people settle on the land. They set fire to clear the underbrush, and soon the forest disappears. Where once there was life and beauty only black and smoldering ruins remain.

Narrator                    Some bright and small tree frogs crawled along the edge of a leaf. In squeaky voices they piped in the man's ear.

Frog                         Senor, a ruined rain forest means ruined lives... many ruined lives. You will leave many of us homeless if you chop down this great Kapok tree.

Narrator                    A jaguar had been sleeping along a branch in the middle of the tree.

Because his spotted coat blended into the dappled light and shadows of the understory, no one had noticed him. Now he leapt down and padded silently over to the sleeping man. He growled in his ear.

Jaguar                    Senor, the Kapok tree is home to many birds and animals. If you cut it down, where will I find my dinner?

Narrator                Two tree porcupines swung down from branch to branch and whispered to the man.

Porcupine 1            Senor, do you know what we animals and humans need in order to live? Oxygen.

Porcupine 2            And, Senor, do you know what trees produce? Oxygen. If you cut down the forests you will destroy that which gives us all life.

Narrator                An anteater climbed down the Kapok tree with her baby clinging to her back. The unstriped anteater said to the sleeping man...

Anteater                Senor, you are chopping down this tree with no thought for the future. And surely you know that what happens tomorrow depends upon what you do today. The big man tells you to chop down a beautiful tree. He does not think of his own children, who tomorrow must live in a world without trees.

Narrator                A three-toed sloth had begun climbing down from the canopy when the man first appeared. Only now did she reach the ground. Plodding ever so slowly over to the sleeping man, she spoke in her deep, lazy voice.

Sloth                    Senor, how much is beauty worth? Can you live without it? If you destroy the beauty of the rain forest, on what would you feast your eyes?

Narrator                A child from the Yanomamo tribe who lived in the rain forest knelt over the sleeping man. He murmured in his ear.

Boy                      Senor, when you awake, please look upon us all with new eyes.

Narrator                The man awoke with a start. Before him stood the rain forest child, and all around him, staring, were the creatures who depended upon the great Kapok tree. What wondrous and rare animals they were! The man looked about and saw the sun streaming through the canopy. Spots of bright light glowed like jewels amidst the dark green forest. Strange and beautiful plants seemed to dangle in the air, suspended from the great Kapok tree. The man smelled the fragrant perfume of their flowers. He felt the steamy mist rising from the forest floor. But he heard no sound, for all the creatures were strangely silent. The man stood and picked up his ax. He swung back his arm as though to strike the tree. Suddenly he stopped. He turned and looked at the animals and the child. He hesitated. Then he dropped the ax and walked out of the rain forest.